

Certificate – Assignment – Reflection

As part of the Introductory course, the PhD student completes an assignment which comprises two parts: an individual work with a reflection and a test related to the introductory course.

In the reflection, the PhD student addresses 11 questions. The aim is to put their research work in a wider context and understand the different competences they need to obtain during their PhD education.

Once they have completed this reflection, you as main supervisor should discuss the reflection together with your PhD student. The purpose is that you as main supervisor get to know your PhD student's background and the qualifications that they need to obtain during their PhD education.

Together with your PhD student you review the reflection, and attest that you have discussed its content. As main supervisor you then submit the following form to the postgraduate studies office.

I hereby certify that I have reviewed my PhD student's reflection and discussed its content.
